

Kathleen Bordelon, Executive Director

Kathleen joined Senior Services of Stamford in May, 2013. As Executive Director, Kathleen is responsible for guiding business strategy, operations, development and program services. In her role, Kathleen promotes a culture of compassion while seeking resourceful solutions to extraordinary challenges for older adults. In this capacity, she also leads the Partnership in Elderly Services (PIES), a professional networking program, to raise awareness of critical issues facing the growing population of older adults.

Prior to joining Senior Services, Kathleen served as the director of volunteers at Person to Person. Prior to that she served as the National Director of Volunteers for the Leukemia & Lymphoma Society where she introduced best practices for chapter and national board development and recruitment. As Executive Director of a national literacy program at the Readers Digest Association Kathleen extended the magazine's brand to educators, consumers and youth audiences and oversaw annual production of a TV special for NBC.

Prior to Readers Digest, Kathleen served as the Director of Strategic Alliances and National Marketing manager for membership at the American Management Association, as Chief Marketing Officer of an IT professional services firm, and Communications Practice Leader at Watson Wyatt where she oversaw employee benefits communications and web development.

Kathleen's commitment to community service spans from professional to volunteers roles. She currently serves on the Board of Governors of the New Canaan Historical Society and the board of trustees of Neighborhood Preservation Foundation Inc. Previously, she served for six years as Vice President of the Board of the Boy Scouts of America, Connecticut Yankee Council and was past president of Battell-Stoeckel Associates - supporting the Yale Summer School of Music, and the Norfolk Historical Society.

Kathleen received a BFA in Communications from the New School University & Parsons School of Design. She has college-age twins, a son and daughter.
